

Bank of America

Fall Travel 2017

More than half of Americans plan to travel this fall for either business or leisure. Here are expected trends for their trips this season.

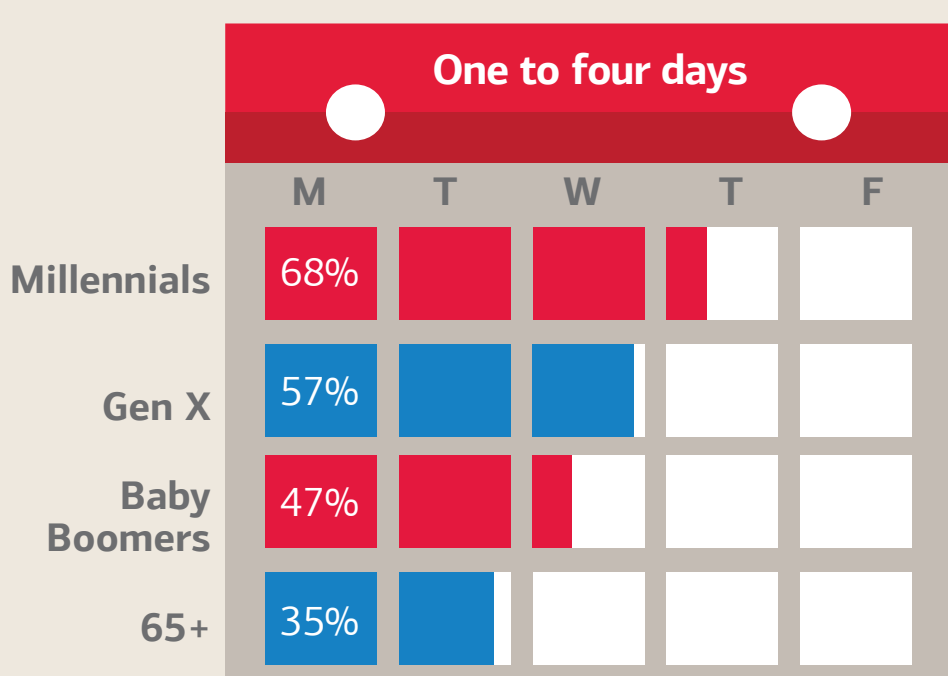

Americans of all ages are packing their suitcases for trips

While more millennials plan to travel this season, their trips are shorter compared to older generations.

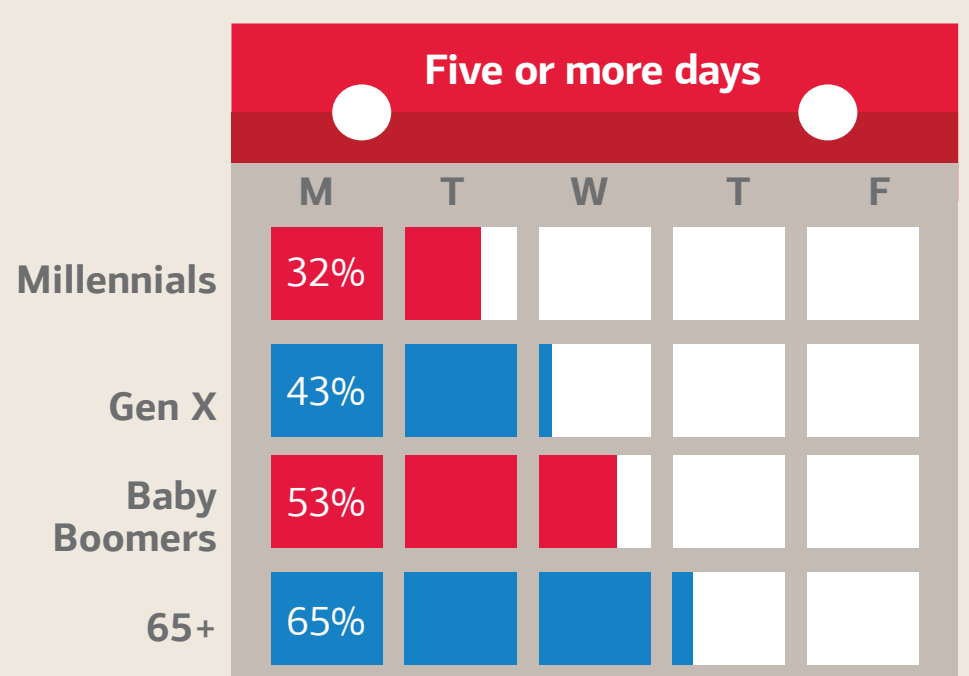

Fifty-three percent of Americans plan to travel for one to four days.

This differs among age groups:

Forty-seven percent of Americans plan to travel for five or more days.

This differs among age groups:

Summer splurge, frugal fall

Americans plan to spend less on fall travel compared to their summer adventures.

Not everyone's in on the fall travel fun

Americans not planning to travel cited cost and busy schedules as the main obstacles.

Of those not planning to travel:

Findings are from an online survey of 2,500 panelists administered in July 2017. Panelists are from a sample of US adults matched to the US Census population in terms of age, gender, household income and region.

* signifies findings from an online survey of 2,500 panelists administered in April 2017.